Of the 90,000 blind persons in the United States only 18 per cent. are under 21 years, which is usually the age limit for admission into the schools for the blind, where about 5000 pupils are under instruction. For the remaining 82 per cent. but few literary privileges were provided until this "Home Teaching Society for the Blind" was started in Philadelphia in 1882. Since that time it has effected a vast amount of good by sending its teachers to the homes of hundreds of blind persons whom they have taught to read, and furnished with a regular supply of embossed books free of cost, from the Library of the Society, which is deposited with the Free Library of Philadelphia, where a special department is devoted to their distribution. A branch Library for Western Pennsylvania is located in the Carnegie Library in Pittsburgh. Thousands of embossed volumes have also been loaned and mailed to blind persons living in the State of Pennsylvania and at distant points as far apart as Alaska and Texas, California and Maine.

As this Society is principally concerned with reaching and teaching the adult blind population, which is so greatly in the majority, it has adopted for their use the easily learned embossed type of the late Dr. William Moon, of England, with its full orthography, as being the simplest and best suited to the requirements of those who have hardened fingers, or are debilitated by disease, accident or old age.

The teachers, however, give instruction in a point type to all who are capable of learning one. During 1913 the total distribution of embossed books in various types from the two Libraries was 22,650.

This Home Teaching Society has now five teachers (four of whom are blind) seeking out and teaching the adult blind in their own homes. One of these teachers is located in Pittsburgh. Experience has taught us that Home Teaching is a necessity and must precede and create the demand for books, for the majority of the adult blind lead secluded lives, and being ineligible for instruction in most of the schools for the blind, will remain without the knowledge of the easily felt Moon type, unless it is brought to their very doors.

Embossed alphabets, first lessons, catalogue of books, and every information concerning The Pennsylvania Home Teaching Society and Free Circulating Library for the Blind and its operations can be obtained from

ANNOUNCEMENT

The Board of Managers of the Pennsylvania Home Teaching Society and Free Circulating Library for the Blind announces with deep sorrow the death, on February 13th, 1914, of its late honored Secretary, Dr. Robert C. Moon, from arterial sclerosis.

The funeral services were held at Holy Trinity Church, Rittenhouse Square, Philadelphia, Pa., and the interment took place at West Laurel Hill Cemetery.

Dr. Moon spent his entire life, up to a fortnight before his death, in carrying on the noble work for the blind which was originated by his father, the late Dr. William Moon, of Brighton, England.

The work of the Society will continue uninterrupted, as heretofore, under the new Secretary, Mrs. I. W. Kennedy, who for nine years was associated with the late Dr. Robert C. Moon and for the past two years has been Assistant Secretary.

READING FOR THE BLIND, BY W. MOON, LL.D.

INSTRUCTIONS—In feeling the Alphabet, be careful to explain the alterations made in the letters, as indicated by the dotted lines. (See the note above the Alphabet). The Reader should always pass the forefinger of his right hand straight along the line, not moving it up and down the letters. The forefinger is held from left to right, and the thumb from right to left, to prevent the reader losing his place. The Brackets guide the finger from line to line. Words ending in ing, most, less, and now, have the last letter put for the whole syllable, as g for ing, t for most, less, two dots, one above the other, giving notice of the contraction. The first letters of land, God, Jesus, and Christ, always stand for these holy names. Two dots, side by side, are used for a full stop, a single dot for any other stop. Verses are divided by two short lines, one above the other.

NOTE—The dotted marks in the block-printed letters placed over the Alphabet show what portions of the common letter are to be used, in order to say the Characters given and over to the back of the hand.
